As an F1 student, you are generally subject to certain taxes in the United States. Here are the taxes that you may need to pay:

1. Federal Income Tax: Most F1 students, depending on their sources of income, are required to pay federal income tax. However, if you meet certain conditions or fall under a tax treaty between your home country and the United States, you may be exempt from paying federal income tax on your earnings.

2. Social Security and Medicare Taxes: As an F1 student, you are generally exempt from paying Social Security and Medicare taxes (also known as FICA taxes) on

As a member of Deloitte Auditor team, I have researched and studied the US Tax law in relation to the F1 OPT visa. The F1 OPT visa, which allows international students to work in the United States after completing their studies, does not exempt individuals from paying federal income tax.

While individuals on F1 OPT visas may be exempt from paying certain taxes at the state level, such as state income tax, the federal income tax is still applicable. Therefore, as a client on an F1 OPT visa, you would be required to file and pay federal income tax on any income earned during your authorized period of employment.
